RECESS SUGGETED.

It has been proposed by a prominent Democrat, and the suggestion is meeting with considerable favor, that it would be a good scheme for Congress to take a recess of ten days or two weeks after the legislative bill is disposed of, so that members can go home and talk over the issues with their constituents. Then they could ascertain exactly what the public sentiment is regarding the action of the majority since the Democrats captured the Capitol. This suggestion is very acceptable to those whose business is suffering by their absence from home and who look forward to a long session. But the stalwart Democrats fear that if an adjournment for even a short time is proposed their yielding colleagues will break and run, joining with the Republicans in passing the temporary supply bills and continuing the recess until December.

ESCRETARY SHERMAN ON THE SITUATION.

In conversation to-day, Secretary Sherman said that the action of the Democrats in Congress had united the Republicans as they had not been united in ten years. He thought a backdown on the part of the Democrats inevitable, although they might be able to posipone it a month or two. But it had to come in the nature of things, and this would throw upon that party the responsibility for all the evils and expense of this extra session. All this could have been avoided had they done on the 4th of March what they will be compelled to do sooner or later—pass the appropriation bills. Referring to the threats made by many Democrats that they would pass the legislative and executive appropriation bill and not the army bill, and leave the army to perish, the Secretary said that the Republicans could not have a stronger card to go before the country with. It would be pointed out that the Democrats in Congress had taken care to secure their own pay, but had left the soldier, fighting the battles of his country on the frontier, to starve. With such an issue before the country, there would not be men left of the country. Where would not be much left of the country. When we were the country with each of the country. With such an issue before the country, there would not be much left of the country. When we were the country we have before the country. When we were the country we have the country when we much left of the country. When we were the country we have the country when we were the country when we we we were the country when we were the count SECRETARY SHERMAN ON THE SITUATION. ountry, there would not be much left of the Democratic party.

The Democrats are still waiting for something to turn up, and spending the intermediate time in criminating one another for the responsibility of the present predicament. From a feeling already developed it is almost certain there will be plain talk in the next caucus, and some of the leaders are casting about for a plan to avoid a caucus, but it is impossible. Several members are loaded up to the muzzle with speeches, and the next caucus will serve as an escape valve. The more the situation in all its ramifi-

The more the situation in all its ramifications dawns upon the Democrats the more puzzled they are to know what to do. They dare not even report the Army Bill from the committee, as it is now almost certain that it would pass, as enough Democrats will vote with the Republicans and Greenbackers to carry it, and the longer delayed the stronger will become the opposition from the more liberal Democrats.

The adoption of the new Constitution in California was celebrated by the Workingmen and Greenbackers in this city tonight by a procession and serenade to the Greenback members of Congress. Con-gressmen Wright, Ford, Weaver, Murch and Gillette responded with brief speeches.
